Dr Noritta Morseu-Diop is a First Nations woman originally from Tamwoy Town, Thursday Island, in Far North Queensland. She became the first Torres Strait Islander to graduate with a PhD from the University of Queensland

As a highly experienced academic, social worker and counselling practitioner, Dr Noritta has been working in and alongside Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities and within non-Indigenous communities throughout the state of Queensland for well over thirty years.

Her areas of work include grief and loss counselling, support and rehabilitation for incarcerated persons, cross-cultural education, and advocacy for Indigenous health, human rights, and social justice.

Morseau-Diop has specialised in understanding the experiences of incarcerated Indigenous people and published her research in a book: Healing in Justice: Giving a Voice to the Silent and Forgotten People. In 2018 she received the Indigenous Community Impact Award. She has also received the Winston Churchill Fellowship.
